STEPHANIE KUSIE

MP CALGARY MIDNAPORE

I am pleased to provide you with a special booklet entitled “Welcome To Your Federal Parliament”. Constituents regularly ask for more information about how Parliament works and this publication explains the daily procedures, the legislative process and the different roles a Member of Parliament takes on once elected to the House of Commons.

Dating back to as early as 1791, our Canadian Parliament has many rich and longstanding traditions. I believe we all have a duty to participate in the democratic process at all levels of government.

It has been an honour and a privilege to serve you since 2017 and I cherish the opportunity you have given me to be your representative in Ottawa. If I can be of assistance to you, please write to me (postage-free to Ottawa), e-mail me, or call my office. I always encourage my constituents to write to me—including your mailing address—so that I may better voice your concerns. As always, my staff and I are here to help you with federal issues.

In your service,

Stephanie Kusie, MP
Calgary Midnapore

THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT

The Constitution Act of 1867 states, “the executive government of and over Canada is declared to continue and be vested in the King.” He acts ordinarily through the Governor General (whom he appoints on the advice of the Canadian Prime Minister). Parliament consists of the King, the House of Commons and the Senate. (Photo below right: King Charles III, at his May 6, 2023 coronation.)

THE KING OF CANADA

The King of Canada is the formal head of the Canadian state. He is represented federally by the Governor General, and provincially by the Lieutenant-Governors. All Federal Acts of Parliament begin with the words: “His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows”. All MPs swear allegiance to the King of Canada and His successors.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

Governor General Mary Simon is the King’s current representative in Canada. Under the Constitution, the Governor General is appointed by the King on the advice of the Prime Minister of Canada. The Governor General is appointed for a term of five years, though the term may be extended.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Canada currently has 338 constituencies/ridings. The candidate with the largest number of votes in each riding is elected to the House of Commons, the primary law-making body. (This is how you elect your Member of Parliament.)

The number of constituencies is reviewed every ten years, pursuant to the Constitution and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, which allots parliamentary seats roughly on the basis of population. This process is currently underway and, as long as the next federal election is called after April 1st, 2024, Alberta will have three more federal seats in the next Parliament. Every province must have at least as many Members in the Commons as it has in the Senate. Constituencies vary somewhat in size, within prescribed limits.

THE SENATE

While seats in the House of Commons are distributed roughly in proportion to population, the 105 seats in the Senate are distributed to provide each major region of the country with roughly equal representation. Senators are appointed by the Governor General on the recommendation of the Prime Minister and hold office until age 75 unless they miss two consecutive sessions of Parliament.

The Senate can initiate any Bills except Bills providing for the expenditure of public money or imposing taxes. It can amend or reject any bill as often as it sees fit. A bill cannot become law unless it has been passed by the Senate.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Canadians do not directly elect their Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is the leader of the party that forms the government.

The Prime Minister is normally a Member of the House of Commons. A non-Member could hold the office but, by custom, should seek to be elected to a seat very soon after appointment. A Prime Minister may lose his or her seat in an election, but can remain in office as long as the party can command a majority in the House of Commons. He or she must, by custom, win a seat promptly. The traditional way of arranging this is to have a Member of the party resign, creating a vacancy, which gives the defeated Prime Minister the opportunity to run in a by-election.

Prior to 1968, the title "Right Honourable" was accorded only to Prime Ministers who had also been sworn into the Privy Council for the U.K. Prime Ministers Mackenzie, Abbott and Bowell were only ever members of the Canadian Privy Council.*

THE CABINET

Cabinet is the executive arm of the Government, consisting of those Members and Senators appointed by the Governor General on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Cabinet is the policy-forming body of the Government. Some Cabinet Ministers may be responsible for more than one Government department. They are responsible for reporting on their departments' activities to Parliament. By convention, almost all Cabinet Ministers are Members of Parliament and are bound by collective responsibility, which refers to the principle that all members are, in the end, jointly responsible for the administration of Government and the policies enacted by the Government. As such, all Ministers must support the final decisions taken by Cabinet. If a Minister is strongly opposed to a decision of Cabinet, only by resigning from Cabinet may a Minister publicly voice opposition.

MINISTER OF STATE

This title was created in 1971 under the Ministries and Ministers of State Act. While no specific duties are given to a Minister of State, they can be assigned by the Governor in Council to assist any Minister or Ministers having responsibilities for any department or other portion of the Public Service. Though not a full member of Cabinet, they are also bound by collective responsibility.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

A Parliamentary Secretary is appointed by the Prime Minister to assist a Minister. A Parliamentary Secretary may table documents or answer questions on behalf of the Minister. Like Cabinet Ministers, they are expected to vote in support of the Government's official position on all legislation.

THE OPPOSITION

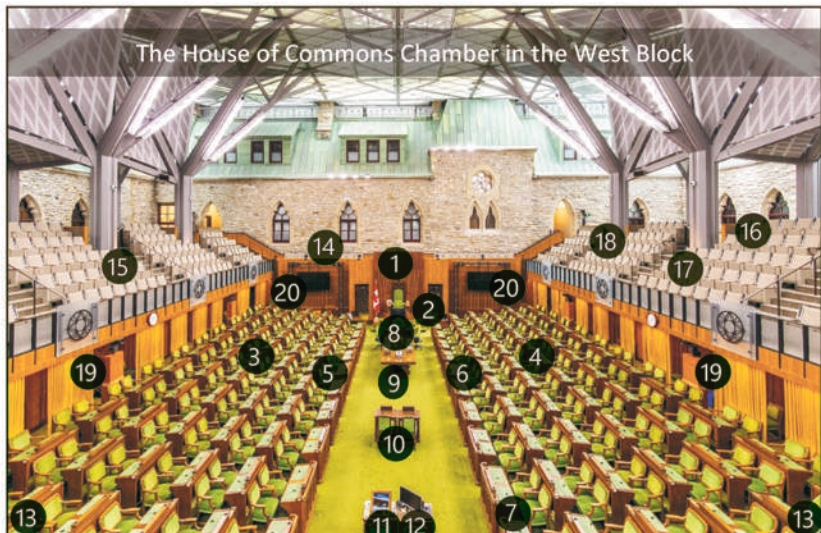

In a parliamentary system, the Official Opposition (which is the federal party with the second largest number of votes) is the driving force in holding the Government accountable and responsible. The process of contest and confrontation between the Government and the Opposition pushes the Government to produce policies that have the widest possible acceptance. A strong Opposition shows leadership, discloses the flaws in the government and presents serious and acceptable policy alternatives. A good Opposition acts as the conscience of the Government in power and can wield considerable influence. A weak Opposition would not be able to ensure accountability, nor would it be considered a credible alternative or "Government in Waiting". The powers of the Opposition are severely limited if the governing party has a majority of the seats in the House of Commons.

Stephanie signs the register following her swearing in as the Member of Parliament for Calgary Midnapore. The Clerk of the House of Commons conducts the ceremony and witnesses the signing.

INSIDE THE CHAMBER

The House of Commons generally meets from September to June. Each day the House meets or sits is called a sitting day. When it is in session, the House meets Monday through Friday. Members are called to the House by the ringing of the bells. While the bells ring, the Speaker and the Clerks march through the Hall of Honour to the Commons Chamber, with the Sergeant-at-Arms leading the way carrying the mace. After taking the Chair, the Speaker leads the House in a brief prayer. On Wednesdays, the House is led in the singing of O Canada. The House is then called to order and the parliamentary day begins.

THE SPEAKER

The Speaker of the House of Commons is elected by all Members of Parliament in a secret ballot after each general election. He or she must be a Member of Parliament. The Speaker is the highest presiding officer. They decide all questions of procedure and order, control the House of Commons staff, and is expected to be impartial, non-partisan and as firm in enforcing the rules against the Prime Minister as against the humblest opposition backbencher. Several Deputy Speakers assist the Speaker.

HOUSE OFFICERS

House Officers are the Clerks of the House and the Speaker's senior procedural advisers. They are seated at a long table in front of the Speaker. At the end of the table lies the mace, the symbol of the authority of the House of Commons. The mace must be present when the House is in session. At the end of the Chamber, opposite the Speaker, sits the Sergeant-at-Arms. He has a number of ceremonial, administrative and security duties. Parliamentary pages are seated at various locations in the Chamber and carry messages to the Members.

MEMBER OF A POLITICAL PARTY

During elections, parties set out their positions on major issues. Once elected, voters expect an MP to support the policies put forth by the MP's party. If the MP refuses to do so, the government will not be in a position to honour its election commitments, nor will the Opposition be able to effectively press its objections.

Based on election platforms and promises, Canadians determine how to vote. MPs have an obligation to support their political party and its leader in working to implement these election promises — promises which can at times be controversial. Members of Parliament are not required to be a member of a recognized political party. However, it has proven more difficult for independent MPs to get noticed and elected in the Canadian political system and so most MPs are elected with a party affiliation.

Separate from their Parliamentary work, as members of a political party, MPs also play a role in the functioning of that party. Each riding has a local riding association (generally known as an EDA) which organizes political events and helps in election campaigns. These local associations also help manage memberships, fundraising and volunteer organization.

The Rhodes Chair serves as the Speaker's Chair in the temporary House of Commons Chamber in West Block.

While Stephanie is a proud member of the Conservative Party of Canada, she is the elected MP for all Calgary Midnapore residents.

While a person may run for political office under a particular political banner, once they are elected, they have a duty to represent and assist all constituents with respect to federal issues and departments.

Business in the House of Commons

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Routine Proceedings covers many different items, not all of which are dealt with every day. A portion of each day is set aside for this purpose and it includes:

Tabling of documents: This is the first item called by the Speaker under Routine Proceedings. At this time Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries have the opportunity to table returns, reports, responses to petitions, Committee reports and other documents.

Statements by Ministers: A Minister may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy and the Opposition has the opportunity to respond.

Presenting of Petitions: This is an opportunity for Members of Parliament to rise and present petitions from Canadians. They can briefly mention the purpose and content of the petition, but they may not indicate support or opposition to the petition.

Introduction and First Reading: This is when draft Acts of Parliament are introduced and given First Reading. The proposer then gives a brief explanation of the Bill.

Presentation of Motions: A motion which, because of its substantive nature or procedural importance, is subject to debate before being put to a vote.

Presenting of Reports: Committees make their views and wishes known to all MPs by tabling their reports in the House. They reflect the opinion of the majority of the Committee. Reports may simply deal with routine matters affecting the operations of a Committee. Other times, following the completion of an inquiry, the Committee may table a report containing its findings and recommendations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

These are items of business (such as Motions, Bills or Questions) that the Government initiates and places on the agenda of the House. They typically represent the priorities of the Government and the heart of the Government's agenda.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Members who are not Cabinet Ministers can present Bills and Motions for debate during Private Members' Business. MPs are given a spot on the list based on a lottery which takes place after every election. When their name "comes up" they can choose an item to be discussed in the House and potentially come to a vote should the MP get the support of the majority of Parliamentarians. A one-hour period is devoted to this business each sitting day.

Less than 2% of Private Members' Bills are ever passed into legislation. Since being elected, Stephanie's name has been too far down the Order of Precedence to allow her to select a piece of legislation to bring before the House. In this Parliament she is number 200 on the list, and there are 140 MPs currently ahead of her.

His Majesty King Charles III King of Canada

King Charles III, formerly known as The Prince of Wales, was born in 1948 and became heir apparent on the accession of Queen Elizabeth II in 1952. Charles Philip Arthur George was born at Buckingham Palace on November 14, 1948. He is the eldest son of Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh.

As The Prince of Wales, His Majesty has taken a keen and active interest in all areas of public life for decades. The King has been instrumental in establishing more than 20 charities over 40 years, including The Prince's Trust, The Prince's Foundation and The Prince of Wales's Charitable Fund.

His Majesty has worked closely with many organisations, publicly supporting a wide variety of causes relating to the environment, rural communities, the built environment, the arts, healthcare and education.

ORAL QUESTIONS (QUESTION PERIOD)

This closely-watched 45 minutes is also known as Question Period, or QP, and is what you would normally see on television. It is a chance for Opposition Members, and sometimes Members of the governing party, to seek information from the Government. By questioning the Prime Minister and the other Cabinet Ministers, Members call the government to account for its actions. QP is broadcast on the CPAC network Monday through Thursday at noon (MT) and at 9 a.m. (MT) on Fridays when the House of Commons is in session. (cpac.com)

PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

Members can ask the government to present certain documents to the House of Commons. The government can respond to these requests when this item is called.

ADJOURNMENT PROCEEDINGS

A Member who is dissatisfied with a reply received in Question Period can ask, in writing, for the matter to be raised again during the Adjournment Proceedings. A Cabinet Minister or Parliamentary Secretary will respond to the concerns raised.

The Role of a Member of Parliament

IN THE RIDING

As a Member of Parliament, Stephanie is invited to countless events and ceremonies throughout the year and this past summer was no different. Throughout the Parliamentary recess Stephanie met with 10 Calgary cultural associations/ organizations. As our city and riding of Calgary Midnapore becomes more diverse it is increasingly important for representatives to meet with new Canadians and learn more about the unique challenges they face.

One of the events Stephanie took part in over the summer was the Indian Independence Day Celebration at Calgary City Hall (right). With 18 participating organizations this was a massive organizational effort that saw over 5,000 Calgarians attend alongside elected officials from the three levels of government—including Alberta Premier Danielle Smith.

DUTIES IN PARLIAMENT

Parliament provides MPs with the opportunity to raise matters of local concern in a national forum. Through debates, QP, Committee hearings, and more, Members are given the opportunity to shape the course of national affairs.

Constituents should expect an MP to be in Ottawa when the House is in session, and to take part in the business of Parliament. By doing so, not only are the concerns of constituents voiced, but the MP also has a chance to put the views of their constituents on the public record.

While there are no public tours of the temporary House of Commons Chamber in West Block while Parliament is in session, you can schedule a tour on weekends and non-sitting days. There is also a new initiative which provides for a virtual tour even while Parliament is sitting.

Information about booking a free tour of Parliament Hill for yourself or your group, is available at:

www.visitparl.gc.ca

The Legislative Process

Most legislation, including Government Bills which are proposed by Cabinet Ministers, is first considered by the House of Commons. The Senate also initiates legislation, but any Bills concerning taxation or the expenditure of public money must originate in the Commons.

Both Houses must approve all Bills before they become law. Each Bill goes through several stages (listed below) in the House, and the Senate. First Reading is a formality and there is no debate or discussion. Second Reading allows Members to debate the principle of a Bill. If a Bill passes Second Reading, it goes to a Committee of the House for detailed consideration. Witnesses are called and amendments to the Bill can be proposed and voted on.

When a Committee has completed its study, it reports the Bill back to the House. The entire House then has the opportunity to consider the legislation. During Report Stage debate, Members can propose additional amendments to the legislation. If passed at this stage, the Bill is called for Third Reading debate. Members who voted for the Bill previously may sometimes change their opinion at Third Reading after seeing what amendments have or have not been made to the Bill. Once a Bill has passed Third Reading in the House of Commons, it must go through a similar process of readings in the Senate. Bills come into force on receiving Royal Assent on a date specified in the Bill or on a date set by Cabinet.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS

Like Government Bills, a Private Member's Bill (or PMB) is a piece of draft legislation which is submitted to Parliament for approval and possible amendment before it can become law. Most originate in the House of Commons, but some are sent to the House from the Senate. In short, MPs who are not Cabinet Ministers can use Private Members' Bills to put forth their own legislative and policy proposals. A lottery system—known as the Order of Precedence—is used to determine who gets to present their proposals and in what order. A minority of MPs will get an opportunity to present legislation and less than 2% of those, are successful.

SUMMARY OF THE LEGISLATIVE PROCESS

- ✓ Introduction – A Bill is formally introduced by the sponsor.
- ✓ First Reading – The Bill is “read” for the first time without debate and printed.
- ✓ Second Reading - The principle of the Bill is debated. It is then voted on and the Bill is sent to a parliamentary committee. If the Bill is not passed, it ‘dies on the Order Paper’.
- ✓ Committee Stage - A committee hears witnesses, examines the Bill clause-by-clause and submits a report with or without amendments.
- ✓ Report Stage - Additional amendments may be moved, debated and voted on in the House.
- ✓ Third Reading - The Bill is debated a final time in the House and voted on.
- ✓ Senate - The Bill is sent to the Senate where a similar legislative process takes place.
- ✓ Royal Assent - Members are summoned to the Senate Chamber where the Bill is given Royal Assent and becomes law.

Coalition Governments

These are temporary alliances formed by two or more political parties to secure parliamentary support and establish governance when no single party obtains a majority of seats. Regardless of the democratic system, coalition governments are likely to be formed in countries undergoing national difficulties or crises, such as war or economic downturns.

These alliances are built to provide the government with a sense of coherence, stability, and political legitimacy. Although only temporary, they make use of the special skills and resources of the persons involved to accomplish common objectives that would be impossible to accomplish on an individual basis. In general, coalition governments provide a way for political parties to unite, share resources, and negotiate challenging political environments.

In Canada, power-sharing formal coalitions between two parties are unusual. Instead, "supply and confidence agreements," in which several parties agree on principles or laws and pledge to back the government for a set length of time, are a more plausible outcome. Unlike the current situation, typical coalitions result in each party being represented in Cabinet and given power. For example, the Leader of the smaller party would serve as the Deputy Prime Minister, and members of that caucus would be given some government portfolios.

In comparison, the Liberals and NDP negotiated a confidence-and-supply agreement that would allow the former to govern — with NDP support— until 2025, contingent on the implementation of a negotiated list of policies and priorities.

Calgary Midnapore Riding

At left are the future riding boundaries (blue) for the constituency of Calgary Midnapore, overlaid on the current (black) electoral map.

This new configuration is only slightly different from the existing one, and will take effect with the next federal election (as long it is called later than April 1st 2024).

Riding boundaries can be adjusted every 10 years to adjust for population growth to ensure all ridings have approximately the same number of residents. Stephanie appeared before the Alberta Boundary Commission during the recent redistribution process.

More information can be found on the process on page 3 of this publication, or at redecoupage-redistribution-2022.ca.

The Flag of Canada

The maple leaf is but the latest in a series of flags that have flown over what has become Canada. The search for a uniquely Canadian flag began in 1925. In 1946 a parliamentary committee called for designs to be submitted. Though more than 2,600 were received, Parliament was never asked to vote on a design.

In 1964 Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson renewed the search with a special committee that held 46 sittings and heard from heraldic experts, historians and citizens.

By October of that year, the number of designs had been narrowed to three: a Red Ensign with the fleur-de-lis and the Union Jack; a sprig of three maple leaves between blue bars; and a stylized maple leaf on a white square flanked by red bars. The committee endorsed the single maple leaf design.

After an intense and emotional debate, the House of Commons approved it on December 15, 1964. Two days later the Senate followed suit. Canada's national flag was proclaimed by Queen Elizabeth II on January 28, 1965 and inaugurated on February 15, 1965. Flag Day is celebrated annually on February 15th.

RULES FOR FLYING THE NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA

The National Flag of Canada must always be flown on its own mast. It is considered improper to fly two or more flags on the same mast.

The flag shall not be used as a cover, for masking (curtain) or as a barrier.

While it is not technically incorrect to use the National Flag to cover a statue, monument or plaque for an unveiling ceremony, it is not common practice to do so and should be discouraged.

Nothing should be pinned to or sewn on the National Flag of Canada.

The National Flag of Canada should not be signed or marked in any way.

When the flag is raised or lowered, or when it is carried past in a parade or review, all present should face the flag, men should remove their hats, and all should remain silent. Those in uniform should salute.

Fly the flag with pride and dignity.

The Peace Tower

The Peace Tower on Parliament Hill is an important symbol of our democracy in Canada and is the most defining symbol of our Parliament Buildings. The tower houses the Memorial Chamber which has the Books of Remembrance.

Just below the iconic clock is a public observation deck that provides incredible views of downtown Ottawa and the surrounding area. (The Tower is now closed for the renovations of Centre Block.)

The tower also has a 53-bell carillon which is played daily by the Dominion Carillonneur.

The flag that flies over the tower is replaced each day. The old flags are presented as special gifts by the Government of Canada.

Canadians can add their name to a — very long — waiting list to receive one at no cost. You can request a flag by emailing your full name, mailing address and phone number to tpsdc.demandesdrapeaux-flagrequests.pwgsc@tpsdc-pwgsc.gc.ca.

You can also request flags that have flown on the East and West Blocks of Parliament. Those waiting lists are slightly shorter.

After Parliament burnt down in 1916, this larger 92-metre tower was built and topped out in 1922.

The Library of Parliament

Located behind Centre Block, the Library is one of the world's most stunning buildings and is the knowledge center for Parliament. It plays a key role in our democracy by providing parliamentarians and staff with impartial and confidential, information, research and analysis.

The Room of Remembrance

The Room is the current home for seven Books of Remembrance which contain the names of over 120,000 Canadians who have given their lives in the service of our country. The books are kept on Parliament Hill and can be publicly viewed. Normally housed in the Memorial Chamber, they have been temporarily moved to the Room in West Block while Centre Block is being renovated.

Every morning, in a solemn ceremony, the pages each of the seven books are turned to reveal a new list of names. You can search for the names of Canada's war dead and those that died in the Service of Canada online to see when their name will be presented by visiting www.veterans.gc.ca/eng/remembrance/memorials/books/search.
